The Importance of Choosing An Educated Pet Professional

The healthcare field is constantly changing as new medical breakthroughs are made and newer types of non-invasive equipment are being used. In the last 10 years alone, there have been breakthroughs in stem cell therapy, laparoscopy, laser surgery, MRI, animal acupuncture and holistic therapies. At the rate these changes are taking place, it's critical that Professional Pet Care Specialists are always educating themselves on issues of health and wellness in the pet care field.

Many Professional Pet Care Specialists will also be members of professional pet sitting organizations, such as Pet Sitters International and the National Association of Professional Pet Sitters. These organizations have certifications, classes and educational resources for professional pet sitters to continue their education.

No one wants to think of their pet getting injured or having an emergency, but should the unthinkable happen, your professional pet services provider needs to know emergency procedures and pet first

Health Tip for the Season

Our pets can't vocalize their pain and discomfort with words as we do but they can tell us if they are hurting. Pets show signs of pain by panting, licking, whining or howling, restlessness, aggression, limping, irritability and withdrawal from normal behaviors. Not all pets will show all signs and many will only show one or two. Pain or discomfort in pets can occur due to injury, illness or age but all pain types can be addressed by working with your pet's medical provider.

Training Tip for the Season

Disasters can happen at any time and the best way to prepare for any emergency is to have a plan of action and practice it frequently. Include your furry family members in all escape plans, and remember to practice with an alarm going off to get your pet prepared for the sounds they make and to reduce aid. If your pet gets excited about a treat and swallows too fast, they can choke. Does the professional pet services provider know the Heimlich Maneuver for cats and dogs? Do they know that depending on the size and age of the pet, the techniques change? A laceration could happen from something as innocuous as a tree branch falling in your yard and your pet running into it. Does your pet care services provider know how to provide immediate care for a laceration? Or a broken bone? Do they know how to stabilize your pet before taking them to emergency care? PetTech offers classes in Pet First Aid and CPR and all Professional Pet Care Specialists should have their pet first aid certification.

As pets grow their needs can change rapidly. A Professional Pet Care Specialist will be educated in proper nutrition, disease care, training, weight loss, and basic health and wellness. A professional will be more than happy to speak with you about your pet's needs at different life stages.

Pets are family members and deserve to be treated as such in every way. We wouldn't ever go to an uneducated doctor or let an untrained mechanic work on our cars. We owe it to our pets to find an educated pet professional! the chance of the alarm scaring your pet and causing them to dash or hide. All pets should know the recall or "come" command to lessen the chances of them running off and getting separated from their family.

Pet Sitter Tip for the Season

If your pet is showing signs of pain or discomfort, please let your Professional Pet Care Specialist know. Not only will they be able to modify your pet's exercise routines, whether during walks or play time, they may be able to recommend supplements, massages or homeopathic veterinarians who can help ease your pet's pain.
